Continuing Our Digital Transition

Erin Simon Schwartz, MD, FACR, FASPNR

As many of you are aware, 2025 marked Applied Radiology's move to being an exclusively digital publication. We very much hope you are enjoying our updated format. For those like me who still want to “page through” the entire journal front to back, that option remains available on our website (<https://appliedradiology.com/>).

Although it may appear to be a final destination, that transition actually reflects only a portion of our ongoing digital journey. Thanks to the very dedicated efforts of our former managing editor, Sharon Breske, and the entire editorial team, we are thrilled to announce our next digital leap, with the rollout of Editorial Manager for Applied Radiology.

With Editorial Manager, we have been able to streamline our entire editorial process. Our editorial team will benefit immensely from the capabilities of this platform to organize and track every review article, case report, and column through its entire journey, from initial submission through double-blinded peer review, determination, revision, and ultimately publication.

For authors, communication will be facilitated via clearer and more consistent pathways for submissions of all types, as well as via automated confirmation of your submission and standardized notifications as your submission moves through the editorial process. Time to publication, already quite low by industry standards, should further decrease as well.

And it is open and available right now! And it is open and available right now! Applied Radiology's Editorial Manager: www.editorialmanager.com/apprad. Please see our updated submission guidelines on www.appliedradiology.com for more details about publishing your manuscript in Applied Radiology.

We hope all of our contributors, authors, reviewers, and entire editorial team will find this transition to be a significant improvement over our previous processes and we look forward to your feedback.
